ALLERGY-SEASON SURVIVAL TIPS

Due to several years of record-breaking levels of seasonal pollens, it is essential to have an allergy survival plan in place. Why such high levels? Climate change, the rise in worldwide temperatures and greenhouse gases, record amounts of precipitation, and over planting of male plants have resulted in longer allergy seasons. All these factors have created a perfect storm for those who suffer from seasonal and mold allergies.

Here are some allergy survival strategies

- Stay Cool: Cool eye compresses may improve appearance and reduce unwanted eye allergy symptoms.
- Be a Star: Wear big sunglasses to block pollen entry into your eyes and eyelids, especially on windy days.
- Rinse Wisely: Wash your eyelids gently when you wash your face each morning. Shampoo your hair in the evening if you have been out on high-pollen days (or after being outdoors) to remove and wash away unwanted seasonal pollens and molds. This will stop them from landing on your pillow and bed sheets during the night. Change your clothing before entering your bedroom to reduce pollens from being brought into your bedroom.
- Wear a Hat: Get a sombrero! Wear a wide-brimmed hat to prevent pollens from landing on your head.
- Say No to Hair Gel: Don't use hair gel and similar hair-care products that can act as "pollen magnets" during the height of allergy season.
- Avoid the Pollen Problem: Consider exercising indoors on very high-pollen days. Higher levels of pollens are usually found on warm, dry and windy days.
- Plan Ahead and Know Your Pollen Count: Go to AAAAI.org/NAB for accurate pollen and mold levels in your area. Pollen levels are typically higher on warm, sunny, dry and windy days, and lower on cooler, moist, wet and "windless" days.
- Don't Line Dry: Never line dry clothing outdoors on high-pollen days, as it will adhere to your linens, towels, etc.
- Try an Allergy-Friendly Garden: Plant gladiolus, periwinkle, begonia, bougainvillea, iris and orchid. These plants won't aggravate your allergies.
- Start Your Allergy Treatment Early: See an allergist for simple, fast, reliable allergy tests so you can get relief.
- Get Shot: Allergy injections are the only immune-based therapy we have that will actually reduce and slow down "allergic disease" progression. It will provide excellent long-term relief in over 85% of patients.
- Avoid Window Fans: This is a rather good way to bring in unwanted pollens or mold spores. If you don't want that, skip window fans.
